THE STORY OF

WILLIAM CHARLES JOUSIFFE

B. 14 APRIL 1780 D. 12 JUNE 1851

OVERVIEW

William Charles JOSEPH was the first-born to Francis and Harriot JOSEPH. His surname is spelt JOUSIFFE on his birth records, but he soon took to spelling his surname "JOSEPH" as it appears in his marriage records and in the naming of his children.

William Charles is named after his grandfather, William. Charles is the surname of his maternal grandmother, Frances Charles, the mother of Harriot Brown.

He must have done his apprenticeship as an Iron Founder and practiced this trade before becoming an Engineer.

He was born in Westminster, London, and spent his whole life in the area, moving at some stage across the river Thames to Lambeth, Surrey and eventually to Islington, Middlesex, London, where he died shortly after being listed in the 1851 census, aged 72.

At the time of his death, he was living alone with his second wife, Elizabeth. He married her in 1815, three years after his first wife, Hannah DAVIS, had died. To this union with Hannah, three known children were born, namely: William (1803); David (1805); and John (1807).

William Charles married Elizabeth NEEDS on 9 Nov 1815, at St Mary, Newington, Surrey. To this marriage three known children were born: Sadly the two eldest sons, Benjamin Henry (1816) and John Matthew (1818) died in infancy. The youngest, Thomas David (1819), appears to have survived the fate of his elder siblings. However, little is known about what became of him, or if he ever married.

At the time of writing this summary, the search is still on for the histories for William (1803); David (1805); and John (1807).
